Modern Psychology has brought to light the individual differences in abilities. No two individuals are alike. A man is what he is, due to several factors. His environment and heredity play a vital role in shaping his personality. Children brought up in an identical atmosphere, too, show sharp differences. Parents do grave injustice to their children when they compare a slow child to his or her comparatively sharp sibling. Nothing plays more havoc with the growth and development of child than constant comparisons. Every child differs in its aptitudes and interests. Therefore it is utter foolishness to compare them. It does more harm than good and often makes a child lose self-confidence. Each one of us has his or her own ideas, interests, ideals and motives which influence behaviour. Hence, we must recognise these disparities and try to understand the patterns of behaviour in the light of the same.
